1.2. OUR STORY

1.2.5. Why Outbound Experiential Learning?

Taking a break from the usual routine in a peaceful setting provides participants with the necessary environment to introspect and analyze themselves. As facilitators, our job is to set the stage for participants to develop solutions to challenging issues. Participants must demonstrate critical thinking, effective communication, creative problem-solving, leadership, risk-taking, and active support for their teammates.

1.2.6. Team Development- An overview

A team is a group of people working together to accomplish a common goal, which they achieve through their combined efforts. When a team is functioning correctly, there is a sense of vigor, cohesion, and excitement. People are there because of what they bring to the table, not because some organization chart says so. If the team wins, the individual wins as well. A team doesn't 'bond' overnight. They go through a lot of growth, and if they're successful, it's because they worked hard for it.

1.2.7. Goals, Strategies, Priorities, and Actions

As a starting point for productive collaboration, ask yourself, "What exactly are we here for?" Unless everyone on the team can agree on this fundamental point, they will be pulling in different directions and wasting their energy. There may be conflicting visions, priorities, and personal goals within the team, but outside the team, there are pressures and opportunities that must be taken into account. Teams will require additional time to investigate these concerns thoroughly. There is no definitive answer to this dilemma. It will have to be reevaluated as the situation changes. When new challenges arise, the group must be adaptable in its working methods and overall strategy. Goal-setting can be a painful process, as past experiences, assumptions, and ways of working have to be questioned and replaced with more appropriate ones.

1.2. OUR STORY

1.2.8. Nature of the program

Management Development Outdoors is a method of experiential learning that aims to break away from traditional teaching methods such as seminars and exams or the traditional classroom. Experiential learning is founded on three proven facts:

- That people learn best when they are personally learning experience.
- For knowledge to be truly meaningful, it must be found by the individual.
- People are more dedicated to the process when given the freedom to set and achieve their learning objectives

1.2. OUR STORY

1.2.9. Experiential Learning

When it comes to education, experiential learning moves away from traditional education's theoretical and parrot-like methods. Some things can't be learned from books or lectures. Experiential learning is a natural and constant life process that all development training, particularly Management Development Outdoors, aims to capitalize on. Experiential learning can be broken down into a four-step cycle:

- Detailed, first-hand accounts of your own experiences, and then:
- The process of reflecting on and observing one's own experiences results in:
- The development of presumptions and abstract concepts leads to:
- A hypothesis will be tested through future actions, which will lead to new experiences.

Kolb's Experiential Learning Cycle

1.2. OUR STORY

Experiential learning, on the other hand, emphasizes the importance of:

- First-hand knowledge and experience
- Developing a person's desire to grow
- Encouraging students to take on as much responsibility for their own learning as possible

1.2.10. How Do We Do it

- In general, people tend to forget what they see and hear, but not what they do. To begin, we use a consultative approach to gain a thorough understanding of the client's needs and challenges and the issues that need to be addressed. Programs are then submitted for review and approval based on this information.
- The next step is to map client needs to various learning tools, activities, and games to achieve the desired training program outcome. Client approval is sought for this activity design.
- During the implementation phase, icebreakers are used to bring the team together. The program is led by trained facilitators. After each activity, a trained facilitator evaluates the results and identifies the desired behavioral changes corresponding to the back-end processes identified during the program's design phase.

1.2.11. Who can benefit from Outbound Experiential Learning?

- University, College, and School Students
- Organization and Community
- Family Day, Corporates, Government agencies bodies

1.2. OUR STORY

1.2.12. Benefit

It has been proven that Out Bound team building and experiential learning can:

- Improve teamwork, communication, and problem-solving.
- Build self-confidence and self-esteem
- Enhance group dynamics and the ability to work together as a cohesive team.
- Assist teams in identifying their strengths and areas for improvement.
